Two Clorox Leaders Among Bay Area's 'Most Influential Women' in Business

5/22/2013

The San Francisco Business Times recently released its annual list of the most influential women in Bay Area business, and two Clorox executives are among the honorees. Susan Gentile, vice president, controller and chief accounting officer, and Dawn Willoughby, senior vice president - general manager, Clorox Cleaning Division, were selected by the newspaper for their leadership, achievements and community involvement.

In the workplace, Gentile likes to use her influence "subtly," and says "speak less, listen more" is the best advice she ever received. She believes the best way to help women advance is by "exposing and promoting their unique talents."

To grow professionally, Willoughby emulates the strengths she sees in others, working "to incorporate those traits into my personal approach to leadership" and use her influence "to make everything I touch better than when I found it." She appreciates co-workers who took the time earlier in her career to share their experiences and tries to do the same as a mentor to others.

The San Francisco Business Times' "Most Influential Women" issue has been published for more than a decade. Past honorees, which also include Clorox's Jackie Kane, senior vice president - Human Resources, are part of the Forever Influential Honor Roll.
