"The scope of solutions and capabilities we deliver will ensure NASA Langley sustains its critical role in advancing space science and deep space exploration. Amentum's technical expertise and agile management strategies have been instrumental in supporting NASA's vision for solving critical challenges and driving future innovation," said Mark Walter, president of Amentum's Engineering and Technology business.

Under the CMOE II contract, Amentum will deliver cutting-edge support for advanced research systems such as wind tunnels, laboratories, and research utilities. Amentum will also provide advanced engineering expertise including design, project, construction, and configuration management, and pressure system recertification. Finally, Amentum will deliver vital mission capabilities, including preventive maintenance, repairs, and central utilities operations across NASA Langley's institutional and research facilities.

Amentum has been a dedicated partner to NASA for over six decades, consistently delivering innovative, safe, and sustainable solutions to meet the agency's evolving needs. Through this new contract, the company will continue to play a key role in advancing Langley's success by managing complex systems, optimizing operational processes, and spearheading critical capital improvements. These efforts include modernizing NASA Langley's infrastructure, including automating laboratory systems and wind tunnel testing facilities.

The CMOE II award reinforces Amentum's commitment to maintaining the reliability and excellence of NASA Langley's world-class facilities.
