The company has signed a 45,000-square-foot lease at 1900 Reston Metro Plaza located in the heart of Reston Station's Metro Plaza District. The LEED-Gold certified building designed by world-renowned architect Helmut Jahn, is a sixteen-story office tower with immediate access to Metro's Silver Line with exceptional connectivity across the Washington, D.C. region.

"Amentum's investment in our new Northern Virginia hub at Reston Station reflects the expanding opportunities of our company and where we are headed," said Amentum's chief operating officer, Steve Arnette. "This modern headquarters, featuring a next-generation Technology Showcase, will bring our teams together and serve as a destination for customers, employees, and partners to experience our advanced engineering and technology solutions firsthand. Ultimately, the new headquarters strengthens our ability to deliver integrated solutions aligned with global demand and government priorities, including across our accelerating growth markets of global nuclear energy, space systems & technology, and critical digital infrastructure."

“The new Reston Station hub will position Amentum at the center of one of the most dynamic innovation corridors in the world,” said the company’s chief people officer, Darren Burton. “The state-of-the-art headquarters reflects the innovative, solution driven culture of our company. It is designed to provide a collaborative environment for our workforce while reinforcing our reputation as a trusted advanced engineering partner dedicated to solving the most pressing challenges across science, security, and sustainability.”

Amentum’s new headquarters will enhance the company’s employee experience while simultaneously streamlining operating costs.

Amentum will relocate to the new Northern Virginia hub from its current headquarters in Chantilly, Virginia.
